NIPAM COMMITTED TO FULFILLING ITS MANDATE

The Institute of Public Administration and Management of Namibia (NIPAM) has changed its approach to fulfilling its mandate of capacitating the Namibian public sector from physical in-person capacitating methods to online.

This move comes after the prolonged national battle with Covid-19 which was exacerbated by the emerging threat of the third wave of new infections in the country. In light of this NIPAM saw, it fit to meet the new challenge head-on with an online approach to enable the continued capacitation of the Namibian public sector and to ensure the fulfilment of its mandate. NIPAM prides itself on its efforts in creating an agile and resilient public sector and it befits an organization like it to seek out creative ways in order to address any issues it might come across. The online approach will allow potential course participants to continue their capacitating efforts online through NIPAM's frameworks that will enable the continued and expected high-quality service delivery from NIPAM to reach where it is needed despite the restrictions due to Covid-19.

Online learning presents a number of other benefits as it enables the ability for remote teaching and learning to circumvent the otherwise large distances between NIPAM and its clients. It also brings into fruition the concept of egalitarian learning as people that would otherwise not be able to access certain building types can now learn without struggling to travel or access buildings that are not wheelchair friendly for example. NIPAM's quick pivot shows its commitment to fulfilling its mandate despite any challenges like Covid-19 and it should serve as a beacon to others to follow suit.

NIPAM encourages its staff to go for covid-19 vaccination to ensure a safer working environment
